

The 3 questions all teachers should be asking their students.

Many students need extra support when it comes to deciding their future.

When they suffer from a loss of direction, opportunities are missed and potential remains unfulfilled.

So it's frustrating that you don't have the time to help all your students find their direction in life - I get it.

The truth is that to get the right results at school students need clarity in six vital areas of their life: finance, career, relationships, fun & recreation, health & fitness and personal goals.

But first students need to know what they want in life to support their personal development.

So the 3 questions that all teachers should be asking their students are...

1. Do you know what you want to HAVE in your life?

Examples I've heard: I want a Mercedes, and a big house

2. What do you want to DO in your life?

Examples from students: I want to travel to broaden my horizons,
I want help other people

3. What kind of person do you want to BE?

Examples: students tell me they want to be liked, confident & do well at school getting good grades

Once students have clarity they then create their own vision board and road map which brings their aspirations to life.

Motivation & engagement is increased because their life now has purpose. Their vision board and road map enables them to choose the right subjects, courses and education to unlock their potential.

Students will see school from a totally new perspective and start to prepare for the next stage of their life and career. YAY!

As a teacher do you...

1. Know what your students want to HAVE in their life?
2. Do you know what your students want to DO?
3. Do you understand who students want to BE as individuals?

Congratulations! You have identified what you know, and what you don't know about your students. That's the first step towards success.
